SUMMARY OF REVISIONS

This revision clarifies procedures and updates responsibilities and approved nomenclatures. A | denotes a revision from previous edition.

1. Heritage is an important element in unit prestige, pride, and morale. It, therefore, impacts readiness and operational effectiveness.

2. The Air Force regularly activates and inactivates units as a result of force structure and organizational changes. Throughout this process, we must take care to preserve those units with the richest heritage by keeping them in active status. This may require transferring a unit designation from one location to another.

3. Priorities. Use the following priorities to assign unit designations. Give:

- 3.1. First priority to preserving units that trace their heritage to the original (pre-1939) Air Force formations.
- 3.2. Second priority to units with records of unique historical achievements.
- 3.3. Third priority to units which have gained the most years of service, unit decorations, and specific accomplishments.

4. Responsibilities. The directive establishes the following responsibilities and authorities:

- 4.1. The Secretary of the Air Force organizes the Air Force. The Air Staff, under the direction of the Chief of Staff, discharges this responsibility. This includes designating Air Force organizations.
- 4.2. The Director of Programs and Evaluation (HQ USAF/PE) maintains, updates, and publishes lists of Chief of Staff of the Air Force (CSAF)-approved unit nomenclatures in attachments to this directive. HQ USAF/PE reviews all proposals to designate Air Force units, certifies compliance with guidelines and, if required, explains any exceptions. HQ USAF/PE sends all proposals to the Chief of Staff for approval.

4.3. The Air Force Historical Research Agency maintains, updates, and distributes annual master heritage rankings of Air Force wings and mission squadrons based on the priorities in paragraph 3.

4.4. Major commands (MAJCOM) use the approved nomenclature and heritage lists when they propose unit designations. Exceptions may be appropriate, but MAJCOMs must justify them to HQ USAF/PE and explain them in the proposal forwarded to the Chief of Staff.

5. The measure for compliance with this policy is maintained in the Office of the Chief of Staff.

JOHN W. HANDY, Maj General, USAF
Director/Programs and Evaluation

Attachment 1PROCEDURES FOR NAMING AND NUMBERING UNITS

A1.1. Nomenclature. Standardize organization titles, when possible. When activating a unit, designate it using the procedures in this attachment.

A1.2. Guidelines. Apply the following guidelines when naming a unit:

A1.2.1. Generally, units require a specific organization title or designation made up of a number or name, a "kind" (nomenclature), and a "type" (organizational level) indicator. An example of a numbered unit designation is:

Title: 2nd Bomb Wing

Number: 2

Unit Kind: Bomb

Unit Type: Wing

An example of a named unit designation is:

Title: Ogden Air Logistics Center

Name: Ogden

Unit Kind: Air Logistics

Unit Type: Center

A1.2.2. Unit Number:

A1.2.2.1. A numbered unit is assigned a number of no more than three numerals (for example, 305th Air Mobility Wing).

A1.2.2.2. Do not use Arabic or Roman numerals in designating Numbered Air Forces (e.g., Seventh Air Force).

A1.2.2.3. Use unit numbers as low in sequence as possible.

A1.2.2.4. Reserve numbers 101 through 300 for Air National Guard units.

A1.2.2.5. Do not duplicate wing and independent group numerical designations. In other words, there is only one 388th wing (presently a fighter wing) or one 720th group (presently a special tactics group). Since these numbers are taken, no other 388th or 720th wing or group is authorized. HQ USAF/PE manages active wing designations.

A1.2.2.6. Give groups and support squadrons the same number as their parent organizations, when possible. If you cannot give groups their parent organization's number (e.g., due to duplication) do not use a number already assigned to another wing. Assign to these groups or squadrons a number that bears a logical relationship to the parent. When feasible, number duplicate units 7XX or 8XX (where XX is the wing number). For example, duplicate squadrons under the 96th Civil Engineer Group would be the 96th Civil Engineer Squadron and 796th Civil Engineer Squadron.

A1.2.2.7. Do not normally give mission squadrons assigned to groups or wings the same number as their parent organizations. When otherwise convenient, use sequential numbers for mission squadrons within the same wing.

A1.2.2.8. You will not normally redesignate a unit numerically.

A1.2.2.9. Normally number units subordinate to a Numbered Air Force (NAF) 6XX (where XX is the NAF number).

A1.2.3. Unit Kind:

A1.2.3.1. Assign a unit nomenclature that describes its assigned mission. Do not construct unit titles that restrict another unit with a like mission from using that nomenclature.

A1.2.3.2. Do not designate composite wings or composite independent groups by "kind" designation (for example, 3rd Wing).

A1.2.3.3. Keep unit "kinds" (nomenclature) and type attributes short and simple. Use more specific nomenclature at lower organizational levels, but keep the number of different titles to a minimum.

A1.2.3.4. HQ USAF/PE maintains lists of CSAF-approved unit nomenclatures for use in evaluating proposals to designate Air Force units. Attachment 2 to Attachment 4 contain current, approved nomenclature lists for numbered wings, groups, and squadrons. You must get approval from CSAF for any deviations to approved nomenclature (see paragraph A1.2.3.6 and paragraph A1.2.4.4). For available unit "kinds" (nomenclatures) see the Air Force Information Resources Dictionary System (AFI-IRDS). Each unit "kind" has a general description to help in selecting the appropriate nomenclature.

A1.2.3.4.1. HQ USAF/PE removes nomenclatures from the lists if they are unused through two consecutive updates to AFPD 38-5.

A1.2.3.4.2. Unit abbreviations are included in the attachments for user convenience. The Deputy Chief of Staff for Communications and Information (HQ USAF/SC) is the office of primary responsibility for unit abbreviations and issues a complete listing of USAF organization abbreviations in AFDIR 37-135, Air Force Address Directory. Submit unit abbreviation change requests to HQ USAF/SC per the instructions in AFDIR 37-135.

A1.2.3.5. AFI 38-101, Air Force Organization, Chapter 2, describes unit types.

A1.2.3.6. If an unusual factor such as a special mission suggests a deviation from the standard organization nomenclature, a MAJCOM may request new nomenclature from HQ USAF/PE. Include in these requests the proposed nomenclature (unit kind), type (level), command to which restricted (if any), and a short definition of the mission implied by the nomenclature. Also include the justification or rationale for the proposed nomenclature. For example:

Proposed Unit Kind: Fighter Training

Proposed Unit Type: Squadron

Command Restriction: None.

Definition: Provides flying training in fighter type aircraft.

Justification: Provide rationale for new nomenclature.

A1.2.4. Procedures for Unit Designation: Units are regularly activated, inactivated, or redesignated for reasons specified in paragraph 2. of this directive. Designation actions will conform to policy criteria outlined in paragraphs 1-4 and procedural criteria documented in this attachment.

A1.2.4.1. Do not designate or redesignate a unit with the exact number, name, and type of another active or inactive unit.

A1.2.4.2. You may use an inactive unit to form a new unit of the same number, name, or similar function. A new unit formed from an inactive unit inherits the lineage and honors of the former unit.

A1.2.4.3. A unit retains its lineage, honors, and history through all activations, inactivations, and redesignations. AFI 84-101, Historical Products, Services, and Requirements, describes the effect an organizational action will have on inheriting the lineage, honors, and history of a unit. Upon request, the Air Force Historical Research Agency will provide MAJCOMs with a list of qualified inactive units for possible activation.

A1.2.4.4. MAJCOMs will use approved nomenclature and heritage lists to propose unit designations. Submit these proposals to HQ USAF/PE for evaluation and certification of compliance with procedural guidelines, according to AFI 38-101. If MAJCOMs wish to deviate from the guidelines in this attachment they must provide explicit justification in a request for approval of an organizational variance. HQ USAF/PE sends all proposals to the Chief of Staff for approval.
